

How to Stay Engaged with Your Injured Worker

Injured employees often have questions and concerns during the Workers' Compensation claims process.

Beyond the unexpected trauma, their concerns often transition to feelings of uncertainty and fear.

After you file the First Report of Injury, your initial engagement will establish a partnership of trust and mutual respect with your injured employee.

Staying connected with your injured employee keeps them committed and supported when they may be struggling with feelings of lost purpose.

Your dedication to frequent check-ins not only helps identify current concerns but is also one of the easiest ways to mitigate claims costs.

We encourage our insureds to communicate at least every other week with their injured workers.

It's important to let your injured employees know you are their advocate and are looking forward to their recovery and return to work.

